Australasian Society
for Continental Philosophy

ASCP Code of Conduct

The Australasian Society for Continental Philosophy ('ASCP') is committed, by its defining aims, to integrity in the professional practice of philosophy as enshrined in the ASCP Constitution ('Constitution'). This Code of Conduct ('Code') applies to attendees of all official ASCP activities, including but not limited to members and invited guests.

The ASCP:

1. strives to provide a welcoming and inclusive environment in all of its activities.

2. requires that individuals behave in a way that is professional, respectful, and courteous.

3. does not tolerate inappropriate or unlawful behaviour, including but not limited to bullying, stalking, discrimination, or sexual harassment.

Individuals found in breach of this Code may be warned, disciplined, removed, or have membership revoked depending on the severity of the misconduct. Where applicable, formal complaints which require the disciplining or removal of a member from the society may be handled in accordance with procedures set out in the Constitution.

Members of the ASCP executive and its subcommittees are responsible for receiving complaints and disclosures of misconduct and acting on them. A complaint or disclosure can be made to any member of the ASCP executive or its sub-committees, and they may be made anonymously.

This Code is supplemented by the Community Guidelines for Communication, available at https://ascp.org.au/executive/governing-documents