

Australasian Society for Continental Philosophy

ASCP Statement on Academic Freedom

In accordance with its aims as outlined in its Constitution, and in a manner consistent with its relevant policies and governing documents, the Australasian Society for Continental Philosophy (ASCP) supports the principle of academic freedom. We also support the use of academic freedom that empowers, advances, and promotes minoritised knowledges. The ASCP defends the right of its members to conduct research and engage in scholarly debate, including on topics that are controversial, where such research and debate are informed by rigorous scholarship and the highest ethical standards, including principles of academic integrity and honesty. The ASCP recognises that such a right is to be exercised respectfully, inclusively, and with epistemic humility, and does not include a right to act unlawfully, including, but not limited to, vilification, harassment, or intimidation.